What You Need to Know About Russia's New Food Supplement Regulations

On-Demand Webinar

The Russian government has signed new serialization and reporting requirements for biologically active food supplements (BAFS) into law.

Meeting these compliance requirements is challenging. There are a high number of compliance events that must be monitored and the process of assembling the required compliance reports is complex. Manufacturers must also be able to integrate with multiple government systems for crypto code management and reporting.

What can you do to ensure a smooth path to compliance? Watch this on-demand webinar recording, "What You Need to Know About Russia's New Food Supplement Regulations," to find out! You'll discover:

- How the new Russia food supplement compliance requirements impact manufacturers and the key upcoming regulatory deadlines.
- Which capabilities manufacturers need to achieve compliance and how to deploy them with minimal operational disruption.
- Why TraceLink Russia BAFS Compliance is uniquely positioned to provide the most scalable, lowest cost path to compliance.
